Artist Caroline Mak Creates “Chain Reaction,” a 25 Foot Long Site-Specific Installation Made with Everyday Objects for BAC Gallery

BROOKLYN, NY - (August 12, 2011) On Friday, September 23, BAC Gallery opens Caroline Mak's Chain Reaction (September 23, 2011 – January 6, 2012), a new 25 foot long, site-specific wall installation created specifically for the gallery space. A seemingly mundane object, a potted plant, initiates a series of chain reactions that travel down the length of the gallery wall. Along the way, collections of objects collide, creating visual puns that are a whimsical play on each object's intended function. Rather than attempting to create a large scale kinetic installation, Mak uses commonly found everyday household objects to weave a complex directional, wall-sized collage where carefully chosen formal elements dictate the topsy-turvy, yet strangely logical, sequence. Six-pack rings and garden hoses find their way into the work, becoming critical junctions in this long wall installation.

Opening Reception:

Friday, September 23, 6-9pm

DUMBO Arts Festival Hours:

Saturday, September 24 & Sunday September 25, Noon - 8pm

Chain Reaction continues Mak's fascination with attempting to translate and recreate natural processes using man-made and found materials. In the process of trying to reconstruct and further understand these processes, systems start to become apparent in the spaces they are assigned to, each self-contained worlds with their own inherent logic.

ABOUT THE ARTIST

Caroline Mak is an installation and mixed media artist from Hong Kong, now based in Brooklyn, NY. She received a BA in Biology from Stanford University (2002) and an MFA from the University of Chicago (2005). She has been the recipient of an Emerging Artist Fellowship from Socrates Sculpture Park, a BRIC Media Fellowship and she was an NEA Fellow at the Elsewhere Collaborative Residency during the summer of 2010. Exhibition highlights include the installations at Socrates Sculpture Park, NY; Islip Art Museum, NY and 'Mirage' at Hong Kong Art Fair. Mak was a resident at Gallery Aferro, Newark, NJ in 2010, and will have a solo exhibition at Aferro in September 2011. In addition, her work will be exhibited at ArtSpace New Haven in the spring of 2012.
