What we offer:

- interpretation of repertoire
- team collaboration
- confidence building
- performance opportunities
- improvisation and composition classes
- fun, innovative approaches to learning

For children age 11 and up, adults of any level, and all instruments. We design residencies where you can:

- learn classical repertoire
- discover jazz principles
- build music literacy skills
- work with expert chamber music coaches
- explore other musical genres
- gain composition tools

Custom-designed workshops are also available for educators from all disciplines according to their classroom and/or private teaching needs.

Learn strategies to nurture creativity, literacy, and pattern recognition that carry over into imaginative, open, scholarly thinking.

Energize your teaching!

Who are we?

Jane Rigler has a Ph.D. in Critical & Experimental Music Practices and enjoys an active career as a performer, composer and New York Teaching Artist for the Lincoln Center Institute, the Manhattan New Music Project as well as other forward thinking organizations.

Sarah Bernstein, violinist, composer and improviser, is known for her insightful teaching methods as well as her originality as a new music performing artist. She holds music degrees in classical and jazz performance, and enjoys composing chamber music for students.

Sara Schoenbeck has an MFA in multi-focus bassoon performance. Using her interest in new music, world music and improvisation Sara gives workshops based on creative play and improvisation for musicians of all ages from the young beginner to college level courses. She firmly believes in helping others find their own artistic voice and pursues this idea in her own active musical career as a touring new music and improvising bassoonist.

Registration Information

There are many different ways to sign up. If you need to have a NYCDOE approved vendor: NO PROBLEM! We work with the Manhattan New Music Program as our conduit organization.
